The Puhinui Regeneration Project - a blueprint for our future

We have had some tremendous media coverage around the $1.2m granting partnership we have entered into with the Puhinui Regeneration Project. You can read about this project on our website or in this article published by the Sunday Star Times - Read Here or you can listen to a Jesse Mulligan interview on National Radio - Listen Here

The Milford Foundation team researched quite literally dozens of potential environmental partners in our commitment to this pillar and what's truly exciting about this partnership, is the fulsome collaboration and integration of local Community, Corporate and Iwi to get the job done. We absolutely believe that this project will be the first of many more like it around New Zealand in the future.

All the best

Chief Executive

Our Partners

The Milford team are out of the office every Wednesday, for good

Every Wednesday, a team of Milford people are packing food parcels at The Village for a couple of hours. And every Wednesday afternoon, when they return to the office, the smiles on their faces could not be broader.

As part of our partnership with The Village, we have created an opportunity for those that want to, to sign up to what we call, Milford Mahi. With over 50 Milford team members having now spent time at The Village, and our business and other charity partners also signing up - this opportunity is also available to any of our Milford Foundation friends to participate. Just send us an email with a Wednesday that suits you, and we will be in touch with the details.
